"In class I would complain about learning about blueprints, and the first thing they showed me when I got to the job site were the blueprints. Everything I complained about—the demands of the teachers and the institution—was worth it. In the real world, I understood why they teach the way they do. My advice to the 11th graders is to appreciate what they're learning; it will help them more than they can imagine."

-Joshuan, 12th Grade Student
